This old face design, BEMBO 270, has such an up-to-date appearance that it is difficult to realize this letter was cut (the first of its line) before A.D. 1500. At Venice in 1495, ALDUS MANUTIUS ROMANUS printed a small 36 pp. tract, Petri Bembi de Aetna ad Angelum Chabrielem liber, written by the young humanist poet PIETRO BEMBO (later Cardinal, and secretary to Pope Leo X), using a new design of type which differed considerably from that of Jenson's. The punches were cut by FRANCESCO GRIFFO of Bologna the designer responsible six years later for the first italic types. A second roman face followed in 1499 and this type design, based on the first, and used to print the famous illustrated Hypnerotomachia Poliphili, was the one which, after adaptation by Garamond, Voskens and others, resulted finally in Caslon Old Face. In 1499 ALDUS MANUTIUS published one of the most famous of 15th-century illustrated books, the Hypnerotomachia Poliphili. The lower-case letters used for the first time in that book were a slightly heavier recutting by GRIFFO of the type used for Bembo's De Aetna. This facsimile revival, which was produced by The Monotype Corporation in 1923, is a faithful copy of the printed original with all its apparent irregularities.

The italic is based on the finest of the letters used by Antonio Blado, who occupied the office of printer to the Holy See during the years from 1515 to 1567. In all probability this printer's types were designed by Ludovico degli Arrighi of Vicenza, a writer of apostolic briefs who published the first calligraphic copy-book manner.
